Every client still feels like your first one.

That's not care. That's a missing system.

Ten years in. Forty clients served.

And you still write every proposal from a blank page.

You don't run a business with forty clients. You run forty first days.

You don't have a capacity problem. You pay a reinvention tax.

Systems don't come after scale. Scale comes after systems.

Four signs you're paying the tax:

- Every proposal starts from a blank page
- Your onboarding is an email thread
- Your method only exists in your head
- More clients make you more tired, not more paid

Reinventing expert: client #10 costs the same as client #1.

Systemized expert: client #10 costs a fraction of #1.

One grows tired. The other grows.

Do this week:

1. List everything you did by hand 3+ times last month.

2. Turn your best proposal into the template.

3. Write the first 48 hours after payment, then make it send itself.
